

In the new Disability Act 2006 there are rules about residences (houses/CRU's) that are run by services and government.

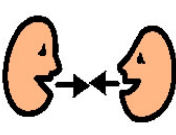

Your (residential) service must give you information called a 'Residential Statement'.

This 'statement' is information and it must tell you things like:

Costs of living in the house

Who to talk to at the service

Your right to complain

What support you will get

Your right to see a Community Visitor

The new law also says that you have rights (things other people should do for you) and responsibilities (things you should do) as a resident in a house/CRU.

Your Rights:

To privacy in your room etc.

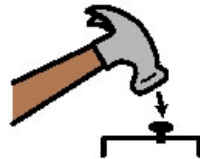

To be treated with dignity

To feel safe in your home

To be told if changes are about your room

To have repairs fixed quickly

Your Responsibilities:

To look after your room

To pay for damage you do

To not break the law

To respect others: (staff / residents)

To pay your rent on time
